MULBERRY'S LATEST COLLABORATION REVS HIGH

Rebellion is the only thing that keeps you alive!" cries a leather-clad Marianne Faithfull in the 1968 Franco-British classic The Girl on a Motorcycle. Stoking that flame in 2013 is Mulberry, which has teamed up with model Georgia May Jagger to create customizable, made-in-Italy biker jackets. "I want people to feel it's their own," says Jagger, who worked with French graphic artist Bruno Michaud to create the three hand-painted motifs of an owl, fox, and bee that gently acknowledge Mulberry's bucolic West Country heritage. Jagger is throwing her jackets—each of which takes six weeks to create—over both hoodies and evening dresses. "The boyish longer line and wide-cut sleeves mean they can go over everything," she says.

The model, who closed Chanel's recent 2011 show in St.-Tropez on a Harley, is also a vintage-jacket collector fond of both the silk bombers she's picked up in Japan and the seventies and eighties leathers that have migrated from the wardrobes of her mother, Jerry Hall, and her father, Mick. Now she's created her own. "My style is more functional than wild," she says with a wide grin, though her jackets' exuberant jewel-colored silk linings tend to her newfound love of interiors: Her first home is decorated in equally arresting hues.—EMMA HEMMES-BATES
